

Hope in the Age of Nuclear Weapons

After seventy years of fruitless debate, there is reason for hope.

Ward Wilson presents groundbreaking new analysis from his forthcoming book, challenging Cold War ideas and offering a revolutionary but realistic path forward. With video comments by Oscar Arias and Freeman Dyson.

“Arguably the most important contribution to the debate over the efficacy/fallacy of nuclear deterrence ever written.”

— Martin Sherwin, Pulitzer Prize winning historian

Ward Wilson, senior fellow at the Federation of American Scientists, is widely acknowledged as the leading source of pragmatic arguments about nuclear weapons in the world today.

Oscar Arias is former president of Costa Rica and winner of the Nobel Peace Prize.

Freeman Dyson is professor emeritus of physics at the Institute for Advanced Study.
