

Austin Robare

Professor Mary

Rhetoric 105

29 November 2016

This essay was a bit confusing for me in the beginning because I did not fully grasp the essential goal of the essay. I knew of the four political parties but I did not have much knowledge on their beliefs and ideas. I chose the Libertarian party because I thought the Libertarian beliefs were closest to mine. I used two attempts on it because the rewrite policy was invoked. In a way, I had already done a revision of my first attempt to make my second attempt better. At first, I only did a summary of the platform and did not input all the necessary components of the rhetorical triangle. After seeing my mistakes and viewing the comments, I knew what I needed to change. My second attempt was much better because I knew what I had to do.

As expected, my second attempt also had room for improvement. In the revision, I changed some ideas, grammar sentence structures, and added new ideas. By looking at the comments and viewing the rubric it helped me see what was wrong and understand the problem. Some sentences were worded badly or were fragments and could be changed and made much more concise. Also, I explained in my paper that the thesis of the plank did not have any qualifiers, however, after reviewing the platform, I found that there were qualifiers, just not much. I think having the second attempt improved my essay even more and gave me a head start to revising it because I already could see comments and look over the first attempt to revise it.