 January 18-25, 2017: Matching Motivations Programs are often driven by the desire to make a positive difference in human health, environment, or climate. However, the individual players needed for program success each have different motivations. People who use interventions may value convenience and low cost; implementers may prize community acceptance and harmony; and program officers may seek professional advancement or institutional rewards. From your own experience, share a story of a program where individual motivations were leveraged well to achieve program effectiveness. Or share a story of a time things were clearly mismatched and the result. What guidance or advice would you give to people to help motivations to work together rather than in opposition to create effective programs?	1	1	DISCUSSION PROMPT: Matching Motivations by Olivia Harris Dec 21, 2016 at 11:12am
