

Join Professor Warren Lavey (Law) and Dr. Holly Rosencranz (Medicine) to explore how the nexus of public health, law, and medicine can be used to understand:

- Several emerging, challenging areas in applying public health expertise, including strategies to identify and reduce the public health impacts from climate change as well as programs to assess and address community health needs
- How laws and health provider professional standards rely on public health analyses
- Structures for funding and managing public health capacity building
- Effects of developing (or failing to develop) new public health analyses and tools

Class meets Thursdays 5-7:20 p.m., location TBA.

Open to graduate students from all disciplines!

Email jjenkins@illinois.edu with any registration issues